“Words belong to everybody. Nobody owns words. There’s nothing sacred about words. Let’s break the word habit”

BRION GYSIN

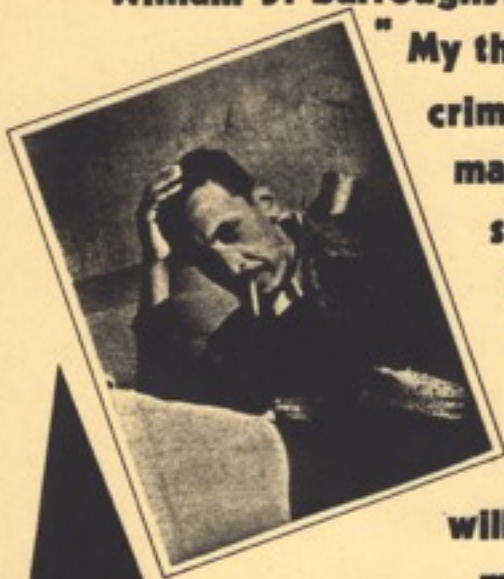

“The only weapons left with which rigid authority, brute force, religious myths and superstitions, social prejudices- all leading to global warfare- could be effectively attacked, indeed counter-acted, were ridicule, humor, de-contamination and deconditioning of accepted conventions, tastes and inherited critical attitudes. The WORD itself had to go, that syllable sacred to church and state by which man controls and is controlled.”

Discipline

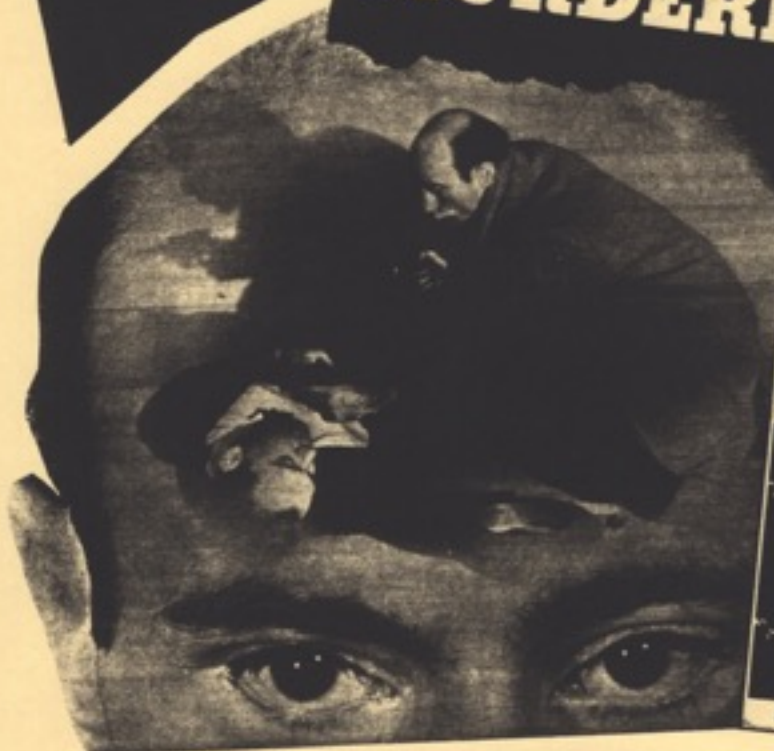

William S. Burroughs:

" My thoughts have been turning to crime lately. And of all crimes, black-mail seems to me the most artistically satisfying. I mean the moment of truth when you see all his bluff and bluster and front collapse, when you know you've got him. His next words - when he can talk - will be: " How much do you want? " That must be real nasty. A man could get his rocks off on a deal like that. " "

We may well find the nation's minds controlled by a single source or a few centralized sources. Such a situation would endanger the free discussion necessary to intelligent democratic action.

“We said that there is no crime that a man will not commit in order to save himself. And, having saved himself, he will commit crimes for increasingly trivial reasons, he will commit them first out of duty, then from habit, and finally — for pleasure.”

A black and white advertisement. The background is a close-up of a man's face, looking directly at the camera. A spiderweb is superimposed over the face, with a spider positioned in the center.
